- Children freed from work in India

Presenter:

Police in India have found around 350 children who were working in factories.

Some of the children had to work 12 hours a day but police have helped them go home to their parents.

Many people are poor in India so children have to work, even though it is against the law. The money they get is sent straight to their parents.

There are millions of children working in India, says Kailash Satyarthi. He is from India and won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2014 because he helps children who cannot go to school because they have to work.

Laws in India have changed to stop children having to work. Children must go to school until they are 14 years old and it is illegal for children under 14 to work.

- Beckham continues to help kids

Presenter:

David Beckham says he wants to continue his charity work to help kids in need, all over the world.

For the last 10 years, he has worked with UNICEF – a children's charity – and now wants to continue working with them for another 10 years.

Beckham says because he was a famous and successful footballer, it is easy for him to speak to important politicians about helping children in their country.

This is what he said at a UNICEF press conference.

David Beckham:

People know me as a footballer, of course, but my life has never just been about the football. What I have done over the last 22 years has been important because it has opened doors. I can go into certain countries and ask to meet a Prime Minister and whether they want to meet me or not ...but.... their children might want to meet me and once you're in that door you can sit down and you can turn round to a Prime Minister and say this needs to change.

- Learning to be honest

Presenter:

A school in England has started lessons in good manners. Children learn to practice things like truthfulness, respect and forgiveness.

The headteacher of the school says it is important for children to learn these skills just like it is important to learn to read and write.

Politicians in England think the lessons are a good idea and they want other schools in the country to have the same lessons as well.

• Australia in Eurovision

Presenter:

Australia will take part in this year's Eurovision Song Contest.

Although the country is not in Europe, there are lots of Australian fans of the competition and many people watch it on television there every year.

This year is the 60th Eurovision Song Contest and because it's a special year, Australia has been allowed to take part.

So what do Australian's think about it? Listen to these people speaking to SBS.

Australians:

I don't know if we should actually, I kind of like observing from afar. I think Australia should be part of Eurovision because it's fantastic; I mean it's amazing.

I think we'd certainly be very enthusiastic participants.

Now Australia – just like all the other countries taking part – has to choose a song and an artist to represent the country in the final which takes place on May 23rd
