POP REEL 3: IRISH RAP, AUSTRALIAN STREET ART AND ANTIGUAN LITERATURE

In Dublin, we meet the temperamental MissElaynious who raps about life in Ireland, her roots in Irish culture and oral storytelling tradition. Music and poems were a way for the oppressed Irish to keep each other informed and to maintain hope. In between vinyl records and DJ equipment in MissElaynious' home, we also find the traditional Irish drum, the bodhra.

Artist Jason Wing wants to tell the story of the Australian Aborigines through his art, about the way they're treated and the way they have been treated throughout history. Jason himself is part Aborigine, part Asian and that affects his art as a designer, artist, sculptor and street artist.

Joanne C. Hillhouse has studied literature in Jamaica and in Miami. Today, she is one of the most popular authors in Antigua and Barbuda. Joanne C. Hillhouse thinks it is important that Antiguan history is written by Antiguan themselves instead of others doing it for them. She is in awe of those who have been here before her and how they, despite oppression and slavery, managed to pass on joy and hope for the future to their children and grandchildren. For Joanne C. Hillhouse, language is a cultural heritage well worth protecting and she lets her characters speak the English spoken in Antigua.

B DISCUSS IN CLASS

- MissElaynious raps about her very political thoughts and opinions, continuing an old tradition where people make their opinions heard through music and culture rather than in a political context. What do you think can be the benefits of that? Can you give more examples where people express their opinions through music?
- Jason Wing has roots among the indigenous people of Australia – the Aborigines. Much like MissElaynious, he has chosen to express his political thoughts through culture, although he uses art instead of music as a form of expression. Do you think art can be political? Do you think art is a good platform for expressing political ideas?
- The Aborigines of Australia did not have a written history until English came to the continent. Instead they have used a tradition of telling their stories orally and through images. What could be the advantages/disadvantages of such a tradition, you think? Can you think of other cultures with an oral/image based documentation of history?
- Joanne C. Hillhouse writes Antiguan histories so that the Antiguan story will be told by themselves and not by others. What can be the advantages/disadvantages of having someone else write your history?
- What do you think the English language has done to the history of countries such as Ireland, Australia and Antigua? Do you think it's important to preserve the original languages of these countries? Why/why not?

D EXTRA MATERIAL

- Work in pairs and write an Emotional Sensory Poem;
Listen to a hiphop song once and just feel the song. Then listen to it again while reading the lyrics.
Discuss with your friend and write down words that describe the emotions in the song. Choose one emotion that you think can represent the song.
Now write your own poem based on that emotion according to this structure:

Title (Emotion)

(Line 1) (Emotion) is (color)

(Line 2) What does the emotion taste like?

(Line 3) What does the emotion smell like?

(Line 4) What does the emotion feel like?

(Line 5) What does the emotion sound like?

(Line 6) What does the emotion look like?

(Line 7) (Emotion) is _____ (include a metaphor)

- Work in groups of three or four and read the article below about the Australian artist Jason Wing. First skim through it and see if you can understand what it's all about. Then read it more thoroughly and see if you can summarise the article using only ten words.

Let all the groups put their words in a word cloud on a webpage (for example wordle, tagul or answergarden) and see if you have written the same words.
