Discussion points

Currencies and types of investments:

In today's program we heard about NFTs, or Non-Fungible Tokens, and how critics warned of the instability of cryptocurrencies.

- If you compare cryptocurrencies with national currencies, such as pounds or dollars, what are the advantages and disadvantages to be aware of when investing?
- Gold and silver are precious metals, which is one of the more common types of commodities in which you can invest. There are other commodities that are considered common, such as livestock (cattle or animal parts), agricultural (for instance wheat) and energy (such as oil or gas). Some of these commodities have huge environmental impacts. If you had a chance to make a substantial amount of money investing in one of these, would you take it? Or would you abstain for the sake of the environment?
- Some of the most common types of investments include stocks, bonds, options, mutual funds, retirement plans, cryptocurrencies, real estate and commodities. Would you be interested in investing your money in the future? If so, what kind of investments would you consider, and why? If not, why not?

Anonymous versus Russia:

Since the invasion of Ukraine began, many countries, companies and organizations have expressed their support for the country by imposing harsh sanctions against Russia. Many countries have also chosen to send aid to Ukraine, in the shape of weapons or funds to help them win the war. In the program today, we learned that an activist group, Anonymous, is raging a cyber-war against Russia to expose its citizens to the truth about the war.

- Is it ok for a group, such as Anonymous, to take matters into their own hands? Could there be a situation when it would not be ok? Where do we draw the line?
- Is all fair in love and war? How far would you be prepared to go to protect your country? Is it ok to break the law? Would the law matter in such circumstances? What are the rules of war?
- In the event of war, you could be ordered by your country to do certain work by law. The government would also be entitled to confiscate things that are yours if they had value for our defense. In Sweden, these laws have not been used since the second world war. What are your views on these laws? Are they still relevant, or would they need to be updated?

Teachers' note

- In the photo we see a mentor and a member of Waves for Hope about to go out surfing. Do you know of any such programs where you live? If so, what do they do in the program? If not, would you like to see a program like this? Would you like to have a mentor? Would you consider being a mentor now or in the future?
- According to Chris Dennis and Manuela Giger, surfing is a kind of therapy. Have you ever tried surfing? If so, where did you try it? If not, would you like to? Is surfing popular where you live?
- There are many different types of mentoring programs like Waves for Hope all over the world. While some have surfing as an activity, others have horseback riding, tennis, football, skateboarding, dancing, singing and many other types of activities. What sport or activity do you find therapeutic?

KEY

1. NFTs, or Non-Fungible Tokens, are digital assets, such as images or videos, that have a digital code attached that proves ownership.
2. A blockchain is a sort of 'ledger', in which transactions are recorded. When you buy an NFT, your purchase and ownership of the NFT is recorded in the blockchain.
3. NFTs can be copied, shared and downloaded quickly. According to Hussein Kesvani, NFTs allow people to own something long term.
4. The critics mention the instability of their value, as cryptocurrencies are considered unstable, as well as their environmental impact. NFTs require a lot of computers to run, which in turn consume a lot of energy.
