NEWSREEL

October 19th 2019

KATE HOLLAND: Hi and welcome to Newsreel. In London, I'm Kate Holland.

Coming up:

- It's Black History Month across the UK and much of Europe.

Person 1: Black History Month makes me feel proud!

- And is it time for a forgiveness emoji?

But first.

- Donald Trump Under Investigation

DONALD TRUMP: The whole thing is a scam, it's a fix.

That's Donald Trump speaking at a press conference released by the White House.

The president of the United States is being investigated after claims he asked Ukraine's leader to damage a political rival.

The Democratic Party – the main opposition to President Trump's party – has begun a formal investigation into the allegations.

Here's Nancy Pelosi, the House Speaker, talking at a press conference and taken from the Washington Post.

NANCY PELOSI: The actions of the Trump presidency revealed the dishonourable fact of the President's betrayal of his oath of office.

She announced an impeachment inquiry. Impeachment means to bring charges against the president that could take him to trial.

The impeachment inquiry is looking into reports that Mr Trump used his power as president to make Ukraine's leader dig up damaging information on his political opponent Joe Biden.

Mr Trump has denied doing anything wrong. And has called it a witch hunt.

DONALD TRUMP: The Republican Party has been treated unbelievably badly and unfairly by the Democrats.

If evidence of wrongdoing is found, it could lead to Mr. Trump being removed as president.

- Black History Month

Black History Month is being marked across the UK and much of Europe this month.

It's all about highlighting the history, culture and achievements of people from African and Caribbean backgrounds. And in the UK, it's been celebrated for more than 30 years.

Nicole works at the UK's first black publisher and specialist bookshop. From the quiet shop, packed full of books, she's been telling me where the idea for Black History Month began:

NICOLE: The idea kind of came about through one man of Ghanaian heritage. A man called Akyaba Addai Sebo and he really wanted wider society, UK society, to understand the contribution of African civilisation to the world.

But what is Nicole doing for the month?

NICOLE: Generally, during Black History Month, we're out. We're out at African markets, we're out at conferences, we're out at book launches, we're out at, you know, just talks and discussions.

But although Nicole thinks the month is important, she doesn't think it goes far enough.

NICOLE: I feel that there needs to be elements of black history just part and parcel of everyday life in people's learning, in schools, you know. That it isn't just in October that you'll be learning about different individuals or different organisations or different movements and so on, that that would be just part of the learning.

Nicole thinks there needs to be more about black history taught in schools generally. So, I went to find out if other people in London agree.

Person 1: Yes, Black History Month is important because in the world we live in there's a lot of people out there, including myself, that doesn't know enough of our history.

Person 2: I think it needs to be acknowledged all year round.

- Forgiveness Emoji

From flamingos to wheelchair users, hundreds of new emojis have been introduced in the last few years. But is it time for a forgiveness emoji?

Well, in Finland a group of charities have come together with the idea of creating one. They hope it would promote a message of peace.

One idea for the emoji is a love heart with a plaster across it.

But what do you think a forgiveness emoji should look like?

That's all for today. I'll be back on the 2nd of November. Thanks for listening!
